

Office of the Director of National Intelligence

George “Wes” Street

Director, National Counterintelligence and Security Center

George “Wes” Street serves as the Director of the National Counterintelligence and Security Center. In this capacity, Street leads the United States’ national counterintelligence priorities and supports the security efforts of the Intelligence Community (IC) and U.S. government. He also serves as the primary counterintelligence and security advisor to the Director of National Intelligence.

Street has served in the U.S. counterintelligence community for more than thirty years, with service as an active-duty U.S. Army Soldier, Army Civilian Counterintelligence Special Agent, and most recently, as the Department of Defense Deputy Director of the National Counterintelligence Task Force.

During his military and Intelligence Community career, Street served in nearly all aspects of the counterintelligence and security communities as a practitioner, manager, and senior leader.

He has numerous deployments in support of combat operations, peacekeeping operations, and has established extensive collaborative relationships with partner nation organizations. Street has extensive experience addressing complex counterintelligence challenges globally. Additionally, Street has a proven track record with interagency counterintelligence investigations, operations, and activities in both foreign and domestic settings.

As Director of NCSC, Street is leading the National Counterintelligence Strategy of the United States and supports the IC and national-level counterintelligence and security programs.
